THE DREAMING

Hoofbeats ... always the hoofbeats ... out of the dark they come, nearer and nearer, louder and louder, until the weight is upon my chest and I cannot breathe, cannot cry out, cannot wake ...

Night after night she rides me. Over black water and sucking peat, through reed and rush and drowning mist, on and on, further from waking, deeper into the dream ... and always the dream ends in the same cold place.

Moon-white she stands upon her island in the Mere, eyes burning like coals through the fog ... watching ... waiting ... I slip from her back and sink, and sink, and sink ... SPLUDGGG ...

THE WARNING

THE MIRE IS DEEP SO KEEP THEE FLEET
FOR STILL THE BOG WILL TAKE THY FEET
BY DAY THE FEN IS FAIR TO TREAD
BY NIGHT IT WAKES THE DROWNED AND DEAD
THE MARE WHO RIDES THEE IN THY SLEEP
NO BLADE MAY SLAY NOR CHAIN MAY KEEP
A BRIDLE ONCE DID HOLD HER FAST
NOW BROKEN FOUR AND SCATTERED VAST
IN FEN AND WOOD AND ABBEY STONE
AND PEATEN HAG EACH LIES ALONE
WHEN LILIES RISE BENEATH THE MOON
SEEK OUT HER ISLE AND SEEK IT SOON
WHO BRIDLES HER SHALL RIDE THE MARE
WHO FAILS SHALL SLEEP FOR EVER THERE

THE WAKING

Cold mud to the knees ... cold mud to the waist ... the bog grips and sucks as I drag myself onto a tussock of sedge, sabre drawn, heart hammering. This is no dream. The fen is real ... and so is she.

Grey stones lean among the reeds, worn by a thousand years of rain, and on the tallest of them words are cut deep, half drowned in moss. I scrape away the slime with my blade, and read ...

THE FEN

Onward I creep, through Sedge and Fern and Gloaming Wood, the mire tugging at every step ... Lights dance between the willows, blue and cold, drifting ever closer ... toads croak, adders hiss, and from the black pools come sounds I dare not name.

Far across the water stand the bones of an Abbey, sunk to its windows in the flood, and beyond it the Peat Hags, where the cutters' spades still lean against the banks and something huge bellows in the dark.

The sun is sinking, red and swollen behind the reeds ... soon it will be night ... soon the hoofbeats will come again ... I must find what was lost ... and the Mere is waiting.

Due to the enormous size and complexity of this MIRE MARE adventure, the night may fall sooner than you expect. Should a fault ever be found, please contact us, so that it may be corrected in all future versions.

FEATURES

SABRE MAN
The Night Mare
Will-o'-Wisps
Marsh Toads
Fen Adders
Grey Herons
Leeches
Boggarts
Drowned Monks
Bog-Bodies
Night Hags
The Mire Ox
Marsh-Lights
Mire-Blooms
The Bit
The Rein
The Headstall
The Buckle
Lantern
Abbey Key
Saga Scroll

Sedge Fen
Gloaming Wood
Sunken Abbey
Peat Hags
The Mere
Mare's Isle
Lily Paths
Spirit Doors
Sinking Bog
Day and Night
160 Screens
Flip Screen Action
Sabre Combat
Superb Animation
Full Colour Graphics
On Screen Scoring
Multi Lives
Keyboard/Joystick Select
Amazing Sound Effects
Continuous Pause
Percentage Rating

All software, graphics and audio visual by
ULTIMATE PLAY THE GAME
Trade Name of Ashby Computers & Graphics Ltd.
Made in England
481013